Lone versus multiple offending in homicide: Differences in situational context

An original paper copy of this issue can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.

REFERENCES

Unlike Shaw and McKay, however, the majority of these have employed multivariate methods that seek to estimate the effects of economic structure independent of other factors such as population composition. The purpose of this paper is to examine the different circumstances and characteristics of family homicide in Australia over a 13-year period.

Virden homicide victim ID'd, man with alleged connection arrested

In particular, Gottfredson 1984 reports that the use of public transportation and nighttime activities such as drinking or going out to pubs increase personal victimization in Great Britain whereas activities such as attending church are associated with lower risk. Consequently, we can only speak generally about individual-level lifestyle factors associated with the risk of violent victimization for the U.

Intoxication and Homicide

Are they both equally willing to come in? Elderly felons and sentencing severity: Intergenerational variations in leniency and sentencing trends. For example, is the relationship between the concentration of poverty and crime rates caused by an aggregation of individual-level effects of social class, or by a genuine community-level effect; or is it simply a differential selection of individuals into communities based on prior e. The consistent finding that family disruption had stronger effects on juvenile violence than on adult violence, in conjunction with the inconsistent findings of previous research on individual-level delinquency and broken homes Wilkinson, 1980 , tends to support the idea that the effects of family structure are related to macrolevel patterns of social control and guardianship, especially regarding youth and their peers Felson and Cohen 1980; Sampson 1986b; Sampson and Groves, 1989.

Violent Victimization and Offending: Individual

When an ecological measure of neighborhood violence was included in their models of individual-level personal victimization, area violence rate was positively associated with risk. The perpetrator, also known as the offender, is an individual who has committed the crime against the victim. These factors suggest that as women's social status improves and they are afforded more options, they are less likely to resort to lethal violence.
