. In his 39 credos - one for each year he's lived - author Vinnie Penn rants about everything from growing up in Italian neighborhoods to the church, school, and home décor, weaving in historical facts that supply rich background material. Some stereotypes are hilarious, but others are hateful.

GUIDO'S CREDOS: THE PAISAN POINT OF VIEW ON EVERYTHING FROM MARRIAGE TO MACARONI BOOK

Haas -- Inquiry teaching and learning: is there, was there, a cutting edge in social studies? Now Beck is the media giant, the hottest radio and network TV talker in the land, and Penn -- his former co-host on WELI's sister station WKCI-FM -- is returning to helm the morning show on WELI, almost five years to the day after leaving the studios of Radio Towers Park in Hamden. Now, the native has not only embraced his heritage, he has written a book about his memories of growing up in an Italian neighborhood in. Other sections ponder topics such as the unairable episode of COPS: Brooklyn, going inside a pitch meeting for an Olive Garden commercial, how to overact at a wake or funeral, and how the original script for Tony n' Tina's Wedding was toned down so as not to frighten the audience.

As a fledgling writer in the mid-1990s, he talked and parodied his way onto Glenn Beck's WKCI-FM program after Beck's partner Pat Gray left, and he even shared a billing with Beck toward the end, just before the Washington state native began his meteoric also sarcastic and teary-eyed rise to the national stage via syndicated radio and cable news channels. His morning-zoo training, political interests and boundless ambition paid off, say industry observers. But they were never buddies.
