Make sure you walk inside as well, you will see a 12th-century christening font and a polyptych. It was made in Paris for a nobleman from the Hurault de Chivernay family of Brittany, as indicated by the inclusion of his coat of arms, an azure cross in a gold crest with suns in.

Triptych of the Seasons: Snow Clad Pine, early 19th Century

In this case, it was necessary to go beyond superficial examination to determine the true origins of this triptych, which was purported to be from the 13th century. It is written in Latin in a humanistic script with illuminated initials throughout and bears a beautiful example of gold, floral gauffering. This is a fifteenth-century manuscript copy of Virgil's Aeneid on paper, written in Italy and dated 22 February 1462.
