Becoming Upended: Teaching and Learning about Race and Racism with Young Children and Their Families

What are the other consequences of global connections? Verwayne prompted them to reflect on the sense of community and friendship they had cultivated together in class. I may follow you around the house just to find out how you feel and think, especially about me. I like to be with older children more than with younger ones.

The statement was issued in January 2010. Students are expected to demonstrate the skills and intellectual processes associated with each theme, and to show their understanding through specific products that the teacher will assess. The NCSS curriculum standards instead provide a set of principles by which content can be selected and organized to build a viable, valid, and defensible social studies curriculum for grades from pre-K through 12.

This theme prepares students to study issues arising from globalization. Understanding what makes your child feel secure and knowing the activities he enjoys and will learn from will make a difference in your final child care decision. The national curriculum standards for social studies present purposes worth caring about, processes worth engaging in, and knowledge worth learning.

These Snapshots also suggest ways in which Learning Expectations shape practice, emphasize skills and strategies, and provide examples of both ongoing and culminating assessment. In schools, this theme typically appears in units or courses dealing with civics, history, political science, cultural anthropology, and fields such as global studies and law-related education, while also drawing upon content from the humanities.
