Yes, I recognize that the article title is a particularly contentious issue. That the debate has been going on for an extended period of time is precisely why I opened this request for comments.

The question of where Central or Eastern Europe begin and end can be dealt with in articles on those subjects. From that I mean - 2 a number of references in the article refer to Galicia as being in Central Europe. We expect that you will understand our compulsion in these books.

You are hereby warned that continuing to refer to Carpatho-Rusyns as Ukrainians may result in complaints being lodged against you in appropriate Wiki forums.

The fact that part of the Carpathians had part called Carpatho-Ukraine for a time after the end of Galicia, does not change the fact that there were Rusyns both in Austrian Galicia and across the rest of the Carpathians as well. Aside from the and aspects, it's merely a cut-and-paste of the identical tirade this IP has posted elsewhere. Galicia should be excised from that list if we determine that Galicia is not part of Central Europe.

Irish are Gaels, but is it therefore accurate to refer to all Gaels as Irish? However, given the nature of this discussion, that the question specifically asked whether the title should remain as it was - the title you changed the article from - it was a move you should not have made until this discussion was completed and a consensus if possible was rendered.
