Tignor Swords and Swordsmen by Mike Loades Babylon of Egypt by Peter Sheehan 65 Christianity and Monasticism in Upper Egypt: Volume 2 — Nag Hammadi-Esna - edited by Gawdat Gabra and Hany N. When the late Twelfth Dynasty pharaoh Senwosret III established a royal tomb and mortuary temple at South Abydos, he also provided local personnel with a newly founded, formally planned town that exemplifies several of the late Middle Kingdom trends identified above. In the few cases in which finds have been inventoried, we have been tempted to assume that the items from house floors represent the residues of activities taking place in individual rooms at the time when the house was occupied.

The impact of local environment aspects on Coptic architecture in Egypt

A similar case can be made for the Mayan center Cerén, also destroyed by a volcanic eruption around AD 600 Sheets 1992, 2002. How much does the space influence the relationships developed among the people living under the same roof? This is revealing episodes of widescale remodelling, interspersed with more common, and perhaps more typical, architectural adjustments and modifications to spaces and their functions? Household Studies in Complex Societies(Micro) Archaeological and Textual Approaches

For most people, it's the Great Pyramid and the Sphinx of Giza. We hope that the papers will give a broad range of case studies and a profound idea of the different approaches toward the interpretation of households as well as address theoretical issues concerning the use of specific data e.

Sexuality in Ancient Egypt

The excavation of houses of different periods in the city of Elephantine in southern Egypt suggests that archaeology may contribute a further distinction, that between clean and unclean space, spaces inhabitants aspire to keep clean and spaces where such an aspiration is deemed of lesser importance. Temples were designed for varying purposes.
