NATO needs to walk a fine line by sending deterrence signals to Russia but without suggesting a lowered threshold for the use of nuclear weapons. The allies are already fielding missile defenses in Turkey to defend against missile attacks from Syria; deterring conventional attacks on NATO territory could be the next step, depending on developments in Syria itself. Through its notification and inspection regime, New START provides the United States insights into Russian strategic nuclear forces that it wouldn't necessarily get without the treaty.

The Status of Deterrence: Start and other Factors

We are already seeing how the Trump administration's perceived disdain for arms control, in combination with its style of managing allied relationships, is affecting the ability of some NATO nations to take steps to maintain effective deterrent capabilities. Therefore, these systems can be addressed in the context of a negotiation of a potential successor agreement. The second was the deterioration of the situation in the Middle East and North Africa: civil wars in Syria and Libya and the emergence of the self-proclaimed Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, which helped spawn the 2015 migration crisis.

If the United States fails to extend New START, it could make it more difficult for NATO to reach consensus on military response options. What deters one leader may provoke another.

Start and the Future of Deterrence

McKenna returned for the second workshop session, at which time he discussed underlying analyses for the U. A workshop participant argued that there are implications to the U. Without a coherent analytic approach that addresses the nuances of today's security environment, Air Force views of its strategic deterrence needs may not be understood or accepted by the appropriate decision makers.

3 Strategic Deterrence: Past, Current, and Future

The long peace that has extended from 1945, when nuclear weapons brought an end to the worst world war in history, continues today. A January 2019 Congressional Budget Office estimates that the Trump administration's current plans for U.
