Women@Work

For years, SAP employees attended one-day gender-awareness training sessions, in which there were presentations on brain chemistry and the science of gender dynamics. The proportion of women at every level in corporate America has hardly changed.

Women in the Workplace Issues: How to Solve the Challenge

SARAH GREEN CARMICHAEL: I have never gotten that advice.

What Works for Women at Work

To better support Black women, companies need to take action in two critical areas. Women remain underrepresented at every level in corporate America, despite earning more college degrees than men for 30 years and counting.

Women At Work — Seneca Women

AMY BERNSTEIN: I have not been told that I apologize too much.

Women in the Workplace 2020: The State of Women in Corporate America

Women tend to like more formality and more presenting. Most commonly, women have to provide more evidence of their competence than men and have their judgment questioned in their area of expertise. And managers need to consider the implications of a workplace in which the traditional routes to the top seem to be working, in a great many cases, for one gender only.
