Jennifer Roback Morse, Will Our Country Listen to Religious Freedom Arguments?

I don't think any one of them is at all rationally compelling. First, the intellectual fragility of religious belief.

The problem with religious people? They always think they're right

At least the rest of the universe is still safe.

Why Science and Religion Are Incompatible

I cannot believe that this BS has gone on for so long, has shaped the world we live in, the laws we abide to, the wars we fight. I have always had an enquiring mind, the thirst for knowledge, and the words and parables found in the bible could never satisfy my questions.

Why Won't They Listen to Reason?

For me, in all my limited studies nothing compares to prayer.

If there's One God, Why All the Different Religions?

This scares me because it makes me realise why religions have always historically fought each other - they are unable to give substantial reasons why the other is wrong. Put particular verses and statements in the context of the story in which they are embedded, and of related statements elsewhere in the Bible. And thirdly if they are valid, why would God let a person suffer for sins he did not commit.
