UN Women

The International Violence against Women Survey IVAWS has interviewed over 23,000 women in eleven countries including Australia, Costa Rica, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Greece, Hong Kong, Italy, Mozambique, the Philippines, Poland and Switzerland about their experiences with gender-based violence. Unfortunately, it seems that the real aim is simply to provide legal cover — by making the strike official — for those women who had already decided to participate in the March 8 strike, rather than to organise a genuine day of action that could bring the country to a halt. This report draws on the work of Global Union Federations and 35 national case studies from different sectors and countries across the world to show that through collective agreements, workplace policies and negotiations, campaigns and awareness raising, trade unions have taken constructive steps to tackle violence in the world of work.
