The Etruscans recognized a 26-letter alphabet, which makes an early appearance incised for decoration on a small terracotta lidded vase in the shape of a cockerel at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, ca 650—600 BC. Several archaeologists who have analyzed Bronze Age and Iron Age remains that were excavated in the territory of historical Etruria have pointed out that no evidence has been found, related either to or to , that can support a migration theory. A massive Greek impact is clear especially in the coastal territory, which has led many to believe that the Etruscans were entirely Hellenized.

Who Were the Etruscans? (Tyrrhenians)

The houses of the wealthy were evidently often large and comfortable, but the burial chambers of tombs, often filled with grave-goods, are the nearest approach to them to survive. Specula were cast in bronze as one piece or with a tang into which a wooden, bone, or ivory handle fitted. However, only one book as opposed to inscription, the , survived, and only because the linen on which it was written was used as wrappings.
