The end of free college in England: implications for quality, enrolments, and equity

Highlights There is a need to understand impact of the National Education Policy 2020 on higher education in India from a gendered lens. Numbers of applicants to most English studies degrees are falling.

Nearly all research funding in Hong Kong comes from the University Grants Committee UGC , and all eight UGC-funded universities compete for the biggest cut of the budget. It is to be noted that hundreds of thousands of children are orphaned, isolated and undernourished, and at greater risk of sexual abuse, violence and withdrawal from school.

Here, seven academics from every corner of the English-speaking world give their views on where their discipline is headed — and whether, with that destination in mind, it would be better to step on the accelerator or the brake. What is to be done, then? Indeed, we might feel grateful to the students exercised by these matters for raising the question at all. Again a generalisation, but equally important is the constant hoarding, referencing and regurgitating of decades-old research which is stagnating the evolution of the discipline.

English is cheap to teach — no labs or expensive equipment are required — so it is a prime vector for quick expansion even though such growth can have a negative effect on National Student Survey scores. Academics with specialisms in English literature and language must likewise be very creative in terms of fitting those specialisms into the needs of communities in both Hong Kong and China — especially with the Chinese government now making more funding available to Hong Kong researchers. While the NEP document does address the issue of unequal access, structural patriarchal norms and practices that often lead to the limiting of choices for women is largely left untouched.
