A mission to a French king having such relations with the English Govern- ment would have been confided by Henry only to a man in whose tact and shrewdness he could place the highest trust. This lady was attracted by the sanctity of a recluse named Herveus, at Calone, near Angers, to quit the English monastery of Clinton, in which she had been placed when a child, and cross the sea to live with him. Since the year 1076 it had been recovered to themselves by the rude Turkish hordes, who first wrested TOA.

There he became a most popular expounder in both branches of the law, until finding his remittances irregular, he came back to England four years after his loss of the bishopric, about the year 1180, his age being in that year no more than thirty-three. The names of places and persons, the chivalrous character of the incidents, the absence of all source of interest but love and the tourney, and the prodigious talent of style, show it, says M.
