Decision making through the ethics lens

Conclusions Our experience researching and disseminating research findings related to GBV and mental health in conflict-affected communities revealed that the prominence of various ethical principles shifted dynamically. How do we define ethics? In short, the crisis of 4 BC does seem a critical moment in political and religious history.

To Heal a Fractured World: The Ethics of Responsibility (review), Shofar: An Interdisciplinary Journal of Jewish Studies

Most researchers 77% disseminated findings via meetings and media coverage ~50%.

Past Ethical Issues

It is important to emphasize the effects of this patriarchal power, which is expressed in everything that is considered undervalued and hierarchized by that supremacy. To the contrary, it would enthrone violence precisely under the guise of non-violence because it would leave the violators unchanged and the consequences of violence unremedied.

Christianity and Violence

As such, asking women about violence should be confidential, and should take place in complete privacy, with the exception of children under the age of two. Study 1: Community-partnered qualitative study The first research project was a qualitative project based of collaborations between the first author, a local nonprofit organization, and a community volunteer group.

A Most Violent Year: The World into which Jesus was Born

None has to wrest anything from others, none has to impose anything on others, and none needs to secure himself from the incursions of others. Did those invading troops plunder Nazareth? As later history often shows, bandits are often more political than we assume, while rebels are more in it for the money - taking from the rich, yes, but not necessarily engaging in any further redistributive activities. It is a deed, word or even thought of unqualified goodness, and actual energy that must be given.

The fractured society: a study of utopian conflicts in world politics

I will not argue that the Christian faith was not and does not continue to be employed to foster violence.
