COVID

The paper argues that should the same amount of resources, energy and goodwill be channeled to the existing, but struggling institutions, than what new organizations will demand, the results will be exponentially better and more likely be more efficient and effective. The study presents a comprehensive assessment of the state of media development in Ecuador and also a series of recommendations to be taken into account by relevant sectors to improve current conditions and construct a more independent, plural and participatory media platform.

Strengthening Reform Initiatives in the Public Administration

This assessment places special emphasis on issues affecting freedom of expression and press freedom; how current state legislation impacts on the media and how it can be amended to provide more space for self-regulation within the media; legislation regarding defamation; restrictions on the daily activities of media outlets; transparency in media ownership; standards of journalism, professional training and research; and labour relations and working rights affecting journalists in their daily activities. Although the analysis is based on international standards and best practices, the recommendations are adapted to Madagascar's particularities.

Public Sector Governance and Institutions

The project supports the NCHR in promoting greater awareness of human rights, both among the population and within public institutions, for example through improved outreach campaigns. It facilitates the access to knowledge and experiences on public sector reform, including but not limited to the technical aspects.

COVID

More importantly, it is also intended to provide a reliable resource for other decision-makers, including donor institutions and development partners with a keen interest in addressing the identified priority areas outlined by the national stakeholders. A detailed study to define indicators of media development was carried out, in order to analyze their respective methodologies as well as their value and relevance to the priorities of the.
