Defence Industry Conversion in China

In the words of Hans-C von Sponeck, Richard Falk and Dennis Halliday: More than ever before in human history the peoples of the world are being severely challenged by problems of global danger that can only be solved globally.

Bernie Finally Puts a Number on Cutting Military Spending

Bringing it back home At a conference like this, it is impossible to quantify the impact it has in people, which new connections were made, who got a useful contact where, who is planning in visiting whom, who learned of a struggle they didn't know about, who planned to give a talk at home, who wrote an article of their experience, who plans to take action on a new issue, etc and etc.

From arms to renewables: How workers in this Southern military industrial hub are converting the economy

The United States alone spends more than the next 15 countries combined on its military.

Global Network

In turn, there is a deep aversion to transformational change in most governments, particularly within national defence establishments.
