Controversy over the interpretation of the functions of the unmanned helicopters. The final section outlines the current situation of various policies adopted by the Japanese government to enhance and accelerate the development of NGRs.

窪田充見 1960

The Civil Code does not set different standards on liability for animals generally perceived as dangerous and those which are not, although the degree of care required by the possessor of the former will be normally regarded as being higher. The guidelines provide examples of NGRs, which include robots for cleaning, transportation, guidance for facilities, security services, housework, care giving, construction of buildings, maintenance, farm work, fishery, entertainment, education, welding, painting, assembling, inspection for quality control, polishing, washing, and communication.
