John Witherspoon Foundation

In all of his political sermons, Witherspoon stressed that the patriot's greatest concern should be his soul's salvation. As a result, he was a strong defender of a national constitution. Some have seen this as a compromise with the Enlightenment, and it is true that Witherspoon could have been more epistemologically and apologetically self-conscious.

At the same time to let us see what we have to expect, and what would be the fatal consequence of unlimited submission, they have uniformly called those acts lenity, which filled this whole continent with resentment and horror. In regards to civil magistrates, Witherspoon thus believed moral judgement should pursued as a science. If the convention had then adjourned, the dissolution of the union of the states seemed inevitable.
