- Improving or organizing reliable market outlets
- Developing improved varieties of the traditional crops that are higher yielding but yet low in their demands for fertilizer, pesticides and water
- Ensuring a timely supply to the farmers of all the inputs required to obtain high production levels (quality seed, fertilizer, spare parts, etc.)
- Improving the quality and capacity of facilities for crop processing and storage so as to reduce post-harvest losses
- Recommending better agricultural production techniques, such as better land preparation and crop rotation or crop mixes
- Improving the quality and motivation of agricultural extension staff to transfer the information on production techniques
- Improving credit facilities: for the short term, perhaps in conjunction with traditional money lenders (harvest-anticipating credit); for the medium term, through Government or private banks
- Improving the transport infrastructure and the means of transportation
- And last but not least, offering prices that are an incentive to farmers to increase production.
