Introduction To Umayyad Coins

During the Umayyad period, the majority of people living within the caliphate were not Muslim, but , , or members of other small groups. During his siege of Circesium in 691, Abd al-Malik reconciled with Zafar and the Qays by offering them privileged positions in the Umayyad court and army, signaling a new policy by the caliph and his successors to balance the interests of the Qays and Yaman in the Umayyad state. As the Muslims took over cities, they left the people's political representatives, the Roman tax collectors, and the administrators in the office.
