In sum, it is almost impossible to evaluate the actual experience of developing countries with market-based environmental policy instruments.

Understanding China's Belt & Road Initiative: Motivation, framework and assessment

The strong positive correlation between the degree of urbanization of a country and its per-capita income has long been recognized.

WTO

Moreover, it should be added that Sub-Saharan countries have generally failed to diversify into non-traditional commodities, such as horticultural products, fruits, and vegetables, whereas OECD countries' imports of such products have increased much faster than imports of traditional unprocessed products. The economies of the LLDCs have been hampered by a number of structural factors, including macroeconomic imbalance, lack of human and physical capital, poorly developed infrastructure, and poorly functioning institutions.

In addition, globalization helped doctors and scientists to contribute to discover many diseases, which spread by human, animals and birds, and it helped them to create appropriate medicines to fight these deadly diseases. Nevertheless as various foreign Embassies downplay their travel advisories, and the Bahrain Saudi Causeway traffic gets back to normal, and hopefully our Formula One event gets re-scheduled, I would expect that we will close out the year on a much brighter note in this regard.

British Library EThOS: The assessment of commercial industrial projects in developing countries : an empirical investigation into the Bahraini experience

SEA represents a proactive approach to integrating environmental considerations into the higher levels of decision-making. In most LLDCs, the private sector is constrained not only by shortages of capital, but also of entrepreneurial, managerial, technical and marketing skills.
