As the more senior admiral, King took command, with air attacks now inflicting damage on both forces.

Battle of Crete

Due to dust clouds on the overcrowded airfields, which could not be subdued even using all available fire tenders, and also aircraft being shot up, a number of crashes occurred on landing rendering the runways unserviceable. This was actually rear guard action aimed at holding the Germans back, while the main body withdrew southwards towards Sphakia and the ships of the Royal Navy.
