The Series A was improved on by the move to unitary construction with a Vincent designed and manufactured four speed gearbox. But after a disastrous 1934 Isle of Man TT, with engine problems and all three entries failing to finish, Philip Vincent with Phil Irving decided to build their own engines.

'Flat Out! The Rollie Free Story'

That settled the wheels and forks, but nothing else. Subsequent models increased the engine capacity to 1,571cc, developing 165 hp, followed by a four-valve, fuel injected engine of 1,600cc developing 180 hp and a top speed of nearly 170 mph.

Rapides also filled all the minor placings, and the police were so impressed that they ordered a number for their own use.

OddBike: The Irving

I need to speak with you, and ask that you contact me through my email address:. About eight Vincents are on view at the Museum along with 480 other machines and thousands of pieces of memorabilia representing motorcycling in America. This brought the power up to 56 bhp at around 5800 rpm.

You are encouraged to visit the site mentioned, as you will be entertained! The Vincent Rapide Type C specification complete with Girdraulic front forks and final suspension refinements became standard for all Vincent Rapides in 1950 and these bikes were sold both in Britain and the United States up until Indian closed its doors in 1953. The rear forks were of P. As the Egli-Vincent won its first race in four of the Swiss hillclimb championships between 1968 and 1971, a track legend was born.
