Douglas Flamming Creating the Modern South Millhands and Managers in Dalton, Georgia, 1884

It was just so far from the truth. Creating the modern South millhands and managers in Dalton, Georgia, 1884-1984 Built by local entrepreneurs during Dixie's post-Civil War textile boom, the Crown Cotton Mill in Dalton, Georgia, acted as a magnet for thousands of newly impoverished white farm families who moved to the factory and its company-owned village from the surrounding countryside. Pavlik critically examines our current digital innovationsblogs, podcasting, peer-to-peer file sharing, on-demand entertainment, and the digitization of television, radio, and satellitesand their positive and negative implications.

Creating the Modern South

Its major contribution to our knowledge of the South is its careful account of the evolution and collapse of mill culture. In Creating the Modern South, Douglas Flamming examines one hundred years in the life of the mill and the town, providing a uniquely perceptive view of Dixie's social and economic transformation. Pages and cover are clean and intact.

Creating the Modern South

Vast in size and stretching from the east to the west coast of the province of Britannia, it took ten years and thousands of hands to build the 73 miles of wall and its impressive forts. Shelf location: BP All items carefully packed to avoid damage from moisture and rough handling. Its major contribution to our knowledge of the South is its careful account of the evolution and collapse of mill culture.
