Hormone Therapy for Menopause

However, women affected with new symptoms of racing heart, urinary changes, headaches, or other new medical problems should see a doctor to make sure there is no other cause for these symptoms. Some of these medications have side effects that may limit their usefulness. There are also several nonhormone prescription medications that may help relieve hot flashes.

Stages of Menopause

Estrogen also influences how the body uses calcium and maintains cholesterol levels in the blood.

Hormone Therapy for Menopause

These conditions can be linked to menopause. It not only controls your period and promotes changes in your body during pregnancy, estrogen also keeps the lining of your bladder and urethra healthy.
