Penicillin: History, Structure, Production and Recovery

The acceleration of penicillin production was one of the most successful achievements of American chemists and chemical engineers, establishing the production of antibiotics and fostering today's pharmaceutical industry. Antibiotics have undoubtedly changed the world we live in, and have certainly contributed to the increase in the human life-span. Following the identification of as the source of the compound in 1928 and with the production of pure compound in 1942, penicillin became the first naturally derived antibiotic.
