DeconstructionBuddhism

Those stones still remain to this day.

Cultural Intersections in Later Chinese Buddhism

The stanza moreover has the aim of establishing the doctrine of the Middle Path — otherwise either the unreality of the reality of all Elements would be onesidedly asserted — and also of making a conclusive statement regarding the repudiation of an exaggerated denial of reality, as well as of Buddhist Practices 131 an exaggerated assertion of it. Sengqiang burned himself before an image of Vimalakīrti, the lay bodhisattva who was very popular in early medieval China, but we find no mention in his biography of the Lotus Sūtra or the Medicine King. As an example of just how blatantly ideological and polemical these shifts could be, we need only consider the measures once taken by the Song emperor Huizong with respect to shuilu icon and altar arrangements.

That subcommentary is extant only in Tibetan translation. Whatever has not been mentioned as allowable or unallowable, which agrees with what is unallowable and not with what is allowable, that is unallowable. When he was about to apply the flame to it, the emperor ordered his chief minister to approach the cauldron and try to dissuade him.
