At the summit, participants heard from experts about how to enhance their programs with understandings of trauma, youth development, and a number of practical strategies to communicate with practitioners from other disciplines and plan for challenges in implementing and evaluating their programs. Summary CHAPTER SUMMARY A mission statement is a written statement of purpose.

Ready, Set, Engage! Ideas and Options for Community Engagement and Partnership Building

A common method of conducting surveys is through mailing them out but, as described by Maya Harris West in her book, Community-centered Policing: A Force for Change, the Lincoln Police Department Nebraska uses police recruits to make random telephone calls throughout the year to those members of the community based upon three different police-citizen contacts: drivers in accidents; victims of crime; and those who received a ticket. Create opportunities for educational exchanges between the police and the community. Answers should discuss the benefits and drawbacks of mission statements and the public expectations that are placed on the department because of the mission statement.

Chapter 1: What Is Community Engagement?

Community engagement can take many forms, and partners can include organized groups, agencies, institutions, or individuals.

Developing Partnerships in the Community

The community wants to have input into how the neighborhood is governed and policed. One area where there is a great deal of concern about accountability is in the handling of misconduct complaints.

This is especially important in communities where some members may not feel at ease to raise issues of concern publicly at regularly scheduled, formal meetings. We will also examine the strategies used by the communities to reach out to and educate the police about the community, such as maintaining communication and follow up between neighborhood meetings, canvassing for volunteers and establishing an active roster, and raising awareness of neighborhood meetings.
