The Buddhist

The first ordinations were attended by a Zen monk, a Shin priest and two Theravadin monks. An accurate description of the contents of the book would be that it contains original poetry by Matty Weingast, very loosely inspired by the poems of early Buddhist nuns. His ecumenical approach and failure to conform to some of the trustees' expectations was said to contrast with the strict Theravadin-style Buddhism at the vihara.

The famous gatha ascribed to the sixth patriarch Hue Nang Hui-neng, in which he presented his insight to the fifth patriarch Hoang Nhan Hung-jen, also expresses this notion and is also caught in the same wrong view: Originally, there is no Bodhi tree The bright mirror does not exist either From the non-beginning of time nothing has ever existed So where can the dust settle? Manidhamma and Ashwin were able to visit the Little Tiger School and meet students and staff.
