Other names for Henry were Hendrik II van Brabant and Henri II de Brabant. The greater part of the church was also probably built under his supervision, as there are certain un-English features about the existing nave and transepts which are not found elsewhere, and appear to be due to foreign influence. This enclosure caused a great deal of distress especially to the labourers and small farmers.

Pastscape

Benedict in all things as it is observed at Cîteaux itself, without putting a forced meaning on any passage in it. In theory the abbot shared the life of the monks, and at first he no doubt to a great extent did so, but the duty of entertaining guests was put upon him, and that led the way to his living apart, and as time went on and discipline became less strict, he seems to have done so almost as completely as the Benedictine did.
