Ramage & the Guillotine by Dudley Pope

Ye gods and little fishes, how he hated cities in general and London in particular: he was more than irritated by the social obligations that had forced the family to come to London, and his father had been testy from the moment he stepped into the coach. The fierce battle starts, eventually the British claim the victory and capture four ships. When a freak technological failure halts traffic to and from Gora, three strangers are thrown together at the Five-Hop.

Vincent; entirely different from the latter, who never took part in a large fleet battle. He is later found by some sailors, who rescue him, but he does not receive any credit for the role he played in the battle. She was under a maintopsail only and steering parallel with the Sibella about eight hundred yards away. Along the way, Martin visits mental health groups and prisons, talks to sex activists, evolutionary psychologists and musicians, works out with Special Forces soldiers, watches cage fights, has a drag makeover and subjects himself to an 'intimacy jam' - all in his quest to unpeel the onion-like layers that make up the modern man.
