Directive 2000/31/EC on Certain Legal Aspects of Information Society Services, in particular Electronic Commerce, in the Internal Market

Harmonisation of the laws of the Member States on copyright and related rights contributes to the achievement of these objectives. This material aims to provide the knowledge and tools that are needed to assess the possible legal issues that can arise in a Free Technology environment.

Legal Aspects of the Information Society

In the absence of such voluntary measures or agreements within a reasonable period of time, Member States should take appropriate measures to ensure that rightholders provide beneficiaries of such exceptions or limitations with appropriate means of benefiting from them, by modifying an implemented technological measure or by other means. This right should be understood in a broad sense covering all communication to the public not present at the place where the communication originates.

events, to the extent justified by the informatory purpose and as long as the source, including the author's name, is indicated, unless this turns out to be impossible; d quotations for purposes such as criticism or review, provided that they relate to a work or other subject-matter which has already been lawfully made available to the public, that, unless this turns out to be impossible, the source, including the author's name, is indicated, and that their use is in accordance with fair practice, and to the extent required by the specific purpose; e use for the purposes of public security or to ensure the proper performance or reporting of administrative, parliamentary or judicial proceedings; f use of political speeches as well as extracts of public lectures or similar works or subject-matter to the extent justified by the informatory purpose and provided that the source, including the author's name, is indicated, except where this turns out to be impossible; g use during religious celebrations or official celebrations organised by a public authority; h use of works, such as works of architecture or sculpture, made to be located permanently in public places; i incidental inclusion of a work or other subject-matter in other material; j use for the purpose of advertising the public exhibition or sale of artistic works, to the extent necessary to promote the event, excluding any other commercial use; k use for the purpose of caricature, parody or pastiche; l use in connection with the demonstration or repair of equipment; m use of an artistic work in the form of a building or a drawing or plan of a building for the purposes of reconstructing the building; n use by communication or making available, for the purpose of research or private study, to individual members of the public by dedicated terminals on the premises of establishments referred to in paragraph 2 c of works and other subject-matter not subject to purchase or licensing terms which are contained in their collections; o use in certain other cases of minor importance where exceptions or limitations already exist under national law, provided that they only concern analogue uses and do not affect the free circulation of goods and services within the Community, without prejudice to the other exceptions and limitations contained in this Article. The provision of such exceptions or limitations by Member States should, in particular, duly reflect the increased economic impact that such exceptions or limitations may have in the context of the new electronic environment. EU countries must also provide fast, efficient solutions to legal problems in the online environment and ensure penalties are effective, proportionate and dissuasive.
