How to Listen

Composers still wore many hats; they were conductors, performers, teachers, etc.

Beatles Radio Waves: BBCR2

In DAB-land, the Channel Formerly Known As BBC7 continues to get into its stride, unveiling The 4 O'Clock Show, a magazine programme clearly intended as a kind of after-school club for all the family until 2007, The Big Toe Radio Show fulfilled that brief. Noisemakers were added, making the tone color of 20th-century music richer and more interesting. A radio reporter provides an eyewitness account of the Allied invasion of Europe.

Voices Of 20th Century

Numbers 3 and 4 were later sold individually, without the sleeve through the Meat Beat Manifesto Bandcamp web store. The NBC Chimes This was the first sound to be trademarked, back in 1950.

Bootleg Sounds of the 21st Century

Many schools and universities were founded during this time that catered to those who wanted to pursue music.

2001

He played just the right type of music for the function. Some of them stayed but were forced to write music conforming to the regime. Rhythms were expanded and melodies had wider leaps, making music unpredictable.

Trademark sound mark examples

Part 3 of Sounds of the 21st Century, the year of the Iraq War, the Hutton Inquiry and Jonny Wilkinson. This is a landmark series.
