But so does every noncomposer.

Later Diaries Of Ned Rorem 1961

Of the songs he was most enthralled by Little Elegy and declared that when I make an opera of Brief Encounter, it must sound like that song. You can go home again.

Yet aren't they precisely what I'm returning to? Thrill of coming back's aborted by too quick contact with humans.

Later Diaries Of Ned Rorem 1961

Monotony of the needed time it takes to notate! You can't have a lover and friends and career.

If you think you have the three, beware! Slender, a little balding, wearing a pullover V-neck sweater and a shirt open at the neck, he paced back and forth on the burgundy plank floors in his flat, and then sat at his writing desk—heavy oak, somewhat awkward to sit at—a gray metal elbow lamp clamped to the desk top, jutting into the air, it angled back over his typewriter.

The Later Diaries Of Ned Rorem: 1961

Homemade atom bombs, now à la portée de tout le monde, oblige scientists to develop, in bottles like morphine, a kind of canned peace to preserve equilibrium. My sober life is an act.
