Tang poetry's big star is 701—762 also pronounced and written as Li Bo, who worked in all major styles, both the more free old style verse as well as the tonally regulated new style verse. After his death he gained even greater popularity, as people sought to collect his calligraphy, paintings depicting him, stone inscriptions marking his visit to numerous places, and built shrines in his honor. Vernacular fiction covered a broader range of subject matter and was longer and more loosely structured than literary fiction.
