Hercules redevelopment to break ground in spring

Featuring sweeping majestic views of the Rocky Mountains and nestled alongside the sparkling blue waters of Lonetree, McNeil and Welch Reservoirs, the 865-acre golf community will encompass a master-planned residential neighborhood, an 18-hole championship golf course and clubhouse, a community center, pool, fitness facility and a dynamic lakefront gathering locale. It also entails ongoing coordination with the relevant regulatory agency to ensure that the agency understands the client's desired endpoint and agrees with the strategy to achieve it, which can often depend on the proposed future land use. Tenders Your golf course architect will prepare detailed documentation, including contracts, plans and specifications to allow the project to be tendered.

Guide for developers

How do you remediate a golf course for single-family use? A 2019 legal agreement between the city and the new owner allows up to three years for a public process to determine if the community wants to continue limiting the future use of this property to a golf course. Involving residents in city planning is how cities create complete neighborhoods, which offer green space, recreation opportunities, housing for a range of incomes, , services, health care, with a focus on access for all residents. Neighbors usually object to redevelopment because they bought with the understanding that they would be living next to open green space protected from development.
