These things and thou must share one equal lot: Die, and be lost, corrupt, and be forgot; While still another, and another race Shall now supply, and now give up the place: From earth all came, to earth must all return; Frail as the cord, and brittle as the urn.

Poems on several occasions.

Some of the older words that are no longer in use also have a modern definition at the bottom of the page, this also helps with the understanding of these delightful poems.
