It contains 142 black-and-white photographs of birds performing activities such as feeding and incubating, and in the case of the white-breasted nuthatch, creeping head-first down a tree-trunk---not just sitting on a branch and looking mysterious.

Former non-circulating library book with stamps, stickers. Arthur Cleveland Bent was one of America's foremost ornithologists, and his twenty-volume series on North American birds was originally published under the sponsorship of the Smithsonian Institution. Its anecdotal style is very readable, even charming.

By no means are the photographs the highlight of this volume. Bent also utilizes the writings of America's great naturalists of the past, including Audubon, Burroughs, and Brewster.
