When the French got news of Washington's arrival, they sent a small contingent of soldiers led by Joseph Jumonville to order Washington out of French territory. This well-paying job was awarded to George mainly as a result of his connections with the wealthy and influential Fairfax family, a connection that George possessed because of his older brother Lawrence's involvement in both the Ohio Company a land company funded largely by the Fairfax family and the Virginia militia. Constitutional Convention of 1787 confirmed for Washington the need to overhaul the Articles of Confederation.
