This distinction was also the core of the problems with the pedagogical sections, since they were more directly connected with spreading the literal ideological meaning of the production, both in content and practice. The magnitizdat, samizdat, and tamizdat, as well as the particular staging 66 Moscow Theatres for Young People of officially sanctioned classic and Soviet plays, significantly widened the gap between what was really going on and what was officially acknowledged to be going on. All theatres were tariff-graded into a four-level system.
