The “New Woman” and the Topography of Modernity in Colonial Korea

However, the embodiment of the New Woman in Korea shows historical variation from the prototype of a more global New Woman. Contemporary Korean baseball terminology is the still-evolving product of a historically contingent competition between two sets of vocabulary: the English and the Japanese. In a patriarchal history, the birth of the New Woman originated from the paucity of the present, the aspiration for new possibilities, and the deeply repressed regret of the Old-Fashioned Woman.

A third case is that of the socialists, who put class consciousness before the individual and nation. These women, who were engaged in urban service industries in Korea, corresponded to the Japanese modan gāru, but were unable to establish a new social class based on economic status and cultural directivity due to their unsettled and transient labor conditions.

Kŭndae ch'ogi Han

The first female socialist association in Korea, Chosŏn Yŏsŏng Tonguhoe Chosŏn Female Comrades Association was formed in 1924. The Old-

Fashioned Women, recognized as the most tragic figures from the perspective of the modernists, were the targets of enlightenment and reorganization for reformist intellectuals, regardless of ideological directivity, nationalism, or socialism.

The “New Woman” and the Topography of Modernity in Colonial Korea

In this work, Yu states that women are the root of the human world, analogous to a ridgepole, the main supporting beam in the construction of the roof of a house. Old-Fashioned Women were regarded as living behind the times, helpless and isolated from the changes accompanied by new lifestyles and new ideas, staying indoors or in the countryside, and adhering to feudal conventions. This contrasts with New Women, who exhibited confidence and high self-esteem; they were considered to play a very active part in the center of the modern city.

The “New Woman” and the Topography of Modernity in Colonial Korea

It requires a distinct territory, political sovereignty of the state, the concept of people and domination of national unity, the national apparatus, and institutions controlling political, economic, and cultural space, and international relationships. Modern Girls in Korea were regarded as an example of colonial mimicry with the prevalence of Japanese cultural ideas such as ero-guro-nansensu.
