From outbreak to surrender: World War Two in the Pacific

In retrospect, it appears that the interval between August 14 and September 2, when the formal surrender ceremonies took place, was essential to enable the Japanese government to prepare the way for a peaceful surrender. Photos selected from the archives of six countries, along with more than one hundred color illustrations of weaponry, uniforms, and memorabilia, highlight the narrative. Thereafter, the Americans and Australians fought together as allies to stem, and ultimately repel the Japanese military onslaught.
