Centennial Loans

When the Cleveland Museum of Art first opened its doors to the public in 1916, museums around the country welcomed the arrival by lending works of art to the fledgling institution for a special inaugural exhibition. This includes exhibitions organized to correspond with America's centennial in 1876, the Academy's own centennial in 1925, and exhibitions of Academy artists organized in other locations including New Zealand and Fort Worth, Texas. .

Paul Getty Museum, on view in gallery 118 beginning January 2. At the third impressionist exhibition in 1877, he showed Ball at the Moulin de la Galette 1876, Musée d'Orsay, Paris , in which he addressed a subject of modern life, one of his most characteristic impressionist paintings on a grand scale, with a rich pattern of light and shadow. Now, as Cleveland celebrates 100 years during which our collection grew to such prominence that we have more often been the lenders of works to other museums, we again welcome some visitors to our galleries.
