The real question is when is it ever appropriate to target specific groups or specific people with such harsh ridicule, and what would make a specific group or specific people legitimate targets for satire? In 1859 there were even briefly fears that France might try to invade Britain. Winkler, Charlene Mires, and Carla Gardina Pestana. However, more striking in light of our discussion about the stylistic positioning of essays in the period as involved and engaged with the reader is the fact that these stance features occur in essays at all.
