Was the Allied position in Burma really doomed in early 1942? : history

The airfield at Myitkyina became a vital link in the air route over the Hump. Like Patton he was a manoeuvrist: he fought differently, seeking victory by cunning and guile, mastering the complexities of battle through remarkable resourcefulness and ingenuity, starkly different from how the British Army fought its wars at the time but more like the style of the modern British Army. Finally, in 1922 he joined the Indian army as a captain in the 6th Gurkha Rifles.

The Art of Manoeuvre at the Operational Level of War: Lieutenant

As late as 20 November the weekly G-2 report dismissed the Japanese as having seventy-five to one hundred men at Yubang Ga, with one hundred more pocketed between Sharaw Ga and Ningbyen, and added that judging by road traffic a battalion was moving up to reinforce. There was 6,770 miles of metre gauge railway, extending from Tenassarim in the south to Myitkyina. The battalion had 27 Bren guns, 51 submachine guns, and 18 60-mm.
