The Battle of Cleveland: Public Interest Challenges Corporate Power by Dan Marschall

And capital markets are essential for the development of a vibrant national economy. This requires understanding the political nature of economic choices and moving beyond an angelic conception of business development as simply a motor of prosperity. But it is impossible to go around the issue of globalization and its entailments if we want to understand why the common good seems so precarious in our national life today.

. To properly balance these interests, commanders must exercise calm and prudent judgment and should consult with their SJAs.

CorpOrNation: The Story of Citizens and Corporations in Ohio

Business schools are creating classes and centers for corporate social responsibility, companies are hiring CSR executives, and new codes are constantly being created in practically every industry.

Corporate Capture Threatens Democratic Government

It's clear from polling that Biden gained a large proportion of his votes due to animosity toward his opponent rather than enthusiasm for Biden. But in most, it will not be in their best interest to take on social responsibilities.

History

It's an extremely lucrative approach for those who feed out of the troughs of the Democratic National Committee, the Senate and House party campaign committees, the House Majority PAC and many other fat-cat political campaign entities.

OHIO CITIZEN ACTION

Whereas earlier the two groups frequently stood on opposite sides of regulatory battles, activists and corporations now communicated directly—circumventing government whenever possible—and collaboration was considered an optimal if not always attained solution. Too many governments failed to heed that lesson. At the time, no one seriously suggested that the correct answer to the constitutional question was that the Times and the Post, as corporations, had no standing to bring a constitutional claim at all.

Challenging Corporate Authority

This is an instance of subsidiarity: power remains public but is shared in the name of securing common goods through direct participation by citizens.

The Battle of Cleveland: Public Interest Challenges Corporate Power by Dan Marschall

Employees and customers often know more about and have more of a long-term commitment to a company than shareholders do. Even with these management structures, corporations continue their focus on building wealth—that is the core purpose of the corporate form—but not for a narrow sliver of their investors only. The historic vote at the UNHRC was carried by 20 votes in favour, 14 against and 13 abstentions.
