Shropshire Parish Records

The Fortnum brothers then visited John Mason, who delivered his instructions regards a codicil to his will, adding several more bequests and making mention of a debt from someone that he wished to forego. The situation of the inhabitants of Shropshire at this period was peculiarly distressing: they were continually subject to the depredations and incursions of the Welsh, their hostile and unmerciful neighbours; and the wolves inhabiting the desolate mountains of that country, frequently came down in herds, and ravaged whole districts. This included £701 17s for the chimney-glass in the Music Room, and £976 10s for those in the Banqueting Room.

THE EASTHOPE FAMILY

South bridge, — house 2. Both books pinpoint the early modern period as a time of considerable change in the landscape, developments charted in manor court rolls and in extant estate maps and surveys of the time.
