Policing the police

Civilian investigators will be less likely to receive the level of cooperation and access necessary for full investigations as they lack even the limited legitimacy accorded police investigators Fyfe, 1985. The lack of any centre for social science police research in Canada, and a lack of government, private sector or police research support mean that most Canadian policing and policy issues are not based upon research evidence, evaluation or even ongoing monitoring.

Police Body Cameras: Top 3 Pros and Cons

This was combined with an increasing awareness of the limits of civilian review of PIP investigations and their apparent limited ability to produce results that would provide compelling public accountability, transparency and independence.

Police Body Cameras: Top 3 Pros and Cons

Conscripts face tougher physical requirements in areas such as eyesight, but minimum academic qualification requirements are less stringent. This is surprising given the importance of PIP and is underscored by the fact that this is the first research document which actually attempts to collect and analyze the available academic and policy information on this critical issue.

Autonomy Gets What Micromanaging Never Will

Police brutality and civilian review boards: a second look.

Autonomy and Accountability: A Balancing Act That Fuels Innovation

Currently, this power of positioning police personnel recommended by the PEB is scattered across the spectrum of bureaucracy and political dispensation. A number of factors further or undercut the effectiveness of civilian oversight boards.

5.1 Autonomy and Accountability

Objective 3: Provide platforms for evidence-based engagement and dialogue between government representatives, policymakers and civil society organisations using regional inter-governmental mechanisms. According to a , 94% of senior executives say that people and corporate culture are the most important drivers of innovation.

Police accountability

Introducing restorative justice to the police complaints system: close encounters of the rare kind.
