The Tsar decided to abandon the position and retreat further east.

Napoleon's Russian Campaign of 1812

Napoleon was angered by the Russian inactivity.

French and Russian soldiers who fought in Napoleon's 1812 campaign are finally buried

The main army would cross the Dvina somewhere to the east of Drissa, and get behind the Russian positions, forcing them to either stand and fight or retreat north towards St. Petersburg. Napoleon reached Vilnius on 28 June, leaving 10,000 dead horses in his wake.
