The Relationship Between Efficiency Measures and Environmental Pollution: An Empirical Study

However, if the retail margin is too high, as in regime 3, then it will also be squeezed while adjusting downwards when compared with the situation where the FP adjustment parameter is not larger than the absolute value of the RP adjustment parameter.

The macroeconomics of agriculture

Conversely, investigated the real GDP-CO₂ emissions nexus in 15 countries and showed evidence of the EKC in most of the countries. The long-term deviations from imbalance errors are absorbed by the extent of the adjustment.

It is in the same vein that added that cointegration enable researchers to determine whether there exists disequilibrium in various markets.

To apply this method, we augmented the correct VAR order p with d extra lag and used the asymptotic χ^2 distribution of the Wald statistic to assess the existence of a causal relationship. The policy implication for this study is that energy efficiency, clean energy utilization and sustainable ecosystem recovery and management are the surest ways to combat climate change and its impacts. The results suggest important insights for private investors, pension funds, and governments as long-term investors often base their decision to invest in equities on the stated macroeconomic variables.

Linkages between inflation, economic growth and terrorism in Pakistan

They conclude that exchange rate plays an important role in attracting FDI. In , the results show that all the variables have positive average values means.

Frontiers

In general the aim of this study is to investigate short-run relationships among macroeconomy, international trade and agriculture in Indonesia. The focus of positive policy integration is to improve food security through the creation of new infrastructures and institutions.

Time

However, variables are unstable when the CUSUM line is out of these two lines. As can be observed, the TVECM 3 in equation specifies that the adjustment towards the long-run equilibrium relationship is regime-specific. From the empirical results which was based on financial system development, it has been proven consistently that financial development is a fundamental determinant of economic growth of many nations with Cameroon inclusive and an increase in the activities of this sector further mitigates growth.
